A new free website is helping children develop the habit of telling their parents about their day at school with fun games to play as rewards.

2dayatschool.com was designed by Glasgow games development company T-Enterprise.

Parents stay in total control by setting up the site for their family with password access.

Children can then login each day, answer a few questions about how school went, and play that day's free game with their pet dinosaur.

Their school news is automatically emailed to their parent.

It's also a powerful way for youngsters to start to tell their parents about difficult issues such as bullying.

The website was inspired when the firm's Zarrar Chishti discovered his son had been given an award at school, but the news hadn't reached him.

"It's a common problem faced by busy parents," Zarrar said.

"Children achieve fantastic things at school but somehow the news doesn't always get round the whole family. We built this game to make it fun for your children to tell you what kind of a day they have had and enjoy a game as a reward."

Zarrar added: "Now I get an email at work every afternoon telling me what my children have been up to at school. I can think about it on the drive home, which makes it a lot easier to start conversations about school during family time."

The more a child uses the site, the more they get to know and play with their pet dinosaur.

The game given to the child as a reward is changed every day to stop them getting bored.

And if they look after their dinosaur well enough, there are surprises at the end of each month – designed to keep interest in the website high.

T-Enterprise employs six people and develops games and fun website applications for businesses across the UK.
