New viral game: Can businesses run economy better than Brown?

Screenshots of the game are available on request

As more and more businesses lose confidence in Gordon Brown's handling of the economy, a new viral game has been released to see if they can do any better themselves.

A survey today revealed only 28% of business leaders have confidence in Brown to lead us out of the current economic problems.

And that has inspired Glasgow games development company T-Enterprise to launch a new viral game called Credit Crunch Chaos.

You play Gordon Brown jumping on £50 notes and securing them with a British flag.

But David Cameron is standing by, waiting for Brown to fail so he can tell the press.

T-Enterprise's managing director Sadia Chishti said: "Businesses are feeling the effect of the current economic climate and are losing confidence in the Prime Minister.

"This game allows you to take on the role of the Prime Minister and see if you can run the economy any better."

Sadia added: "As well as giving some light entertainment, it may make people think about how difficult Gordon Brown's job actually is."

T-Enterprise employs six people and works with businesses across the UK.

In the last few months it has been featured in hundreds of media outlets across the world for its weekly games.

One recent game helped lorry drivers get their revenge on Jeremy Clarkson for insensitive comments.

In another, players had to help Gordon Brown shred sensitive data before the government lost it again.

You can sign up for the free games for yourself at www.t-enterprise.co.uk/corporate-technology/fab-newsletter.aspx.
